SALISBURY UNIVERSITY CAMPUS PAPER

Salisbury University Ranks In the Top Tier

By Jesse Brushe

Salisbury University receives its first Top Tier ranking from U.S. News & World Reports 2003 "America's Best Colleges." The recently released edition, one of the most popular college ranking publications, places Salisbury University high in the northern region for universities.

"We are obviously extremely pleased about the recognition Salisbury University is receiving from these national publications," said SU President Janet Dudley-Eshbach in a recent press release.

The recent U.S. News & World Reports ranking adds optimism to the rapidly improving state of the University. Confronted with many issues such as congested parking and lack of adequate housing, which is a result of student expansion, the new ranking provides a needed boost of confidence for both administration and the students.

Take into consideration for the ranking are factors such as student retention rate, financial resources, and peer assessment. The factors, totaling 16 in all, are weighted and compared against other schools and ranked by score. U.S. News & World Reports follows a four-tier system with the first tier being the highest possible.

Prestigious rankings such as U.S. News & World Reports Top Tier list raises the question of future growth for Salisbury University. As SU becomes a top contender within the region, hard questions such as buying the Dresser facility to provide adequate space for expansion will need to be closely scrutinized.

As SU continues to make strides towards improvement, rankings such as this further solidify SU's role as a leader among universities within the region.

Salisbury University students gathered outside on the evening of September 11, 2002, for a remembrance walk. Candles were lit and carried across campus ending in a vigil of solemn silence. This event was one of many provided by the campus community in an effort to say, "We remember."

Letter from the Editor

By Tracy Shortt

As we all know this campus is bursting at the seams. However, our campus faculties are not expanding to meet the needs of the students. As a student I find this very unsettling.

SU receives the lowest state appropriations of all state campus universities. Salisbury has recently been ranked in the top tier in a national college ranking publication. This ranking shows how much improvement has taken place at SU over the past ten years. As a student I was pleased to have the school that I am attending in the spotlight.

While all of the recognition from various publications is flattering for students, faculty and staff, I don't see how this will make a difference in the long run. The state seems to be under the impression that our poorly funded school will continue to flourish despite their lack of enthusiasm for education.

However, the state does expect the university to grow and prosper in numbers. While this currently may be happening, it may come to a halt in the future. Students cannot continue to be educated in an environment that cannot keep up with their needs. This may sound cliché, but we are the future leaders of America. It just seems like the thickheaded politicians haven't gotten that yet.

Our school has thrived from donations from alumni and benefactors from the Salisbury area. The kind of donations SU has received from these people is evident in the naming of buildings.

It just seems harder to succeed when the state of Maryland is not supporting success as much as it should be.

Letter to the Editor

As I looked at my semester bill I noticed a new fee had been added; The Technology fee. An additional $100 from every student was put towards "wiring the campus," or so I thought. It wasn't until my first trip to the computer lab that I discovered students must now swipe their gull cards, and select their print job from the touch screen.

I asked an employee why the university has this new system, and she informed me that it was an effort to conserve paper. In affect, this would mean that installing an advanced printing system all over campus costs less than paper. The tech also informed me that the university might soon be charging per printing page.

In the three years I have been here, I have never had a pleasant moment with the ITT Helpdesk. Already while using this new system, the printers have jammed twice when I am trying to print. So off I wander to the help desk, where I find two employees busy, talking on the phone and doing homework.

After standing there for a couple of minutes, I explain my problem, and someone is to correct it. I go back into the lab, and ten minutes later, an employee comes to the door of the lab yelling about certain people printing files. After I admit that one was mine, she continues to yell from the door of the packed lab, telling me that the printer can't handle a document as large as the one I was trying to print. I never knew that the state of the art technology couldn't handle a six-page document.

SU's Rising Club Interests

By Bryan Shone

Throughout the past few years the various clubs at Salisbury University have expanded, offering more and more students with never-ending choices on how to spend their free time within the university community. Although students are encouraged to join the clubs on campus, it seems as though this "encouragement" is not necessarily the hook that reels them in. The general response from students regarding why they are members of clubs at SU can be summed up with simplicity.

"It's fun," said Danny Landsman, president of the SU Fishing Club. "And who doesn't want to have fun?"

Why would one avoid the advantages to joining a club here at SU? It is obvious that college students are not the wealthiest in town, so instead of buying a surfboard, why not join the SU Surf Club and borrow a board from them? The price to join might cost a whopping $10, but after that the only cost is one's time.

Another relieving aspect to joining a club is the idea of flexibility. Most clubs at SU do not demand hours that students do not have to spare. Missing a meeting or a trip will not negatively affect a member of a club.

"I get to participate in my favorite hobby and at the same time I'm meeting new people and having a blast. Now that's a bargain," said Roland Yarrington, the Vice President of the SU Fishing Club.

Mike Fletcher is a member of the SU Soccer Club. "I enjoy the flexibility of playing soccer at a competitive level and it gives me a chance to represent SU on the field," said Fletcher.

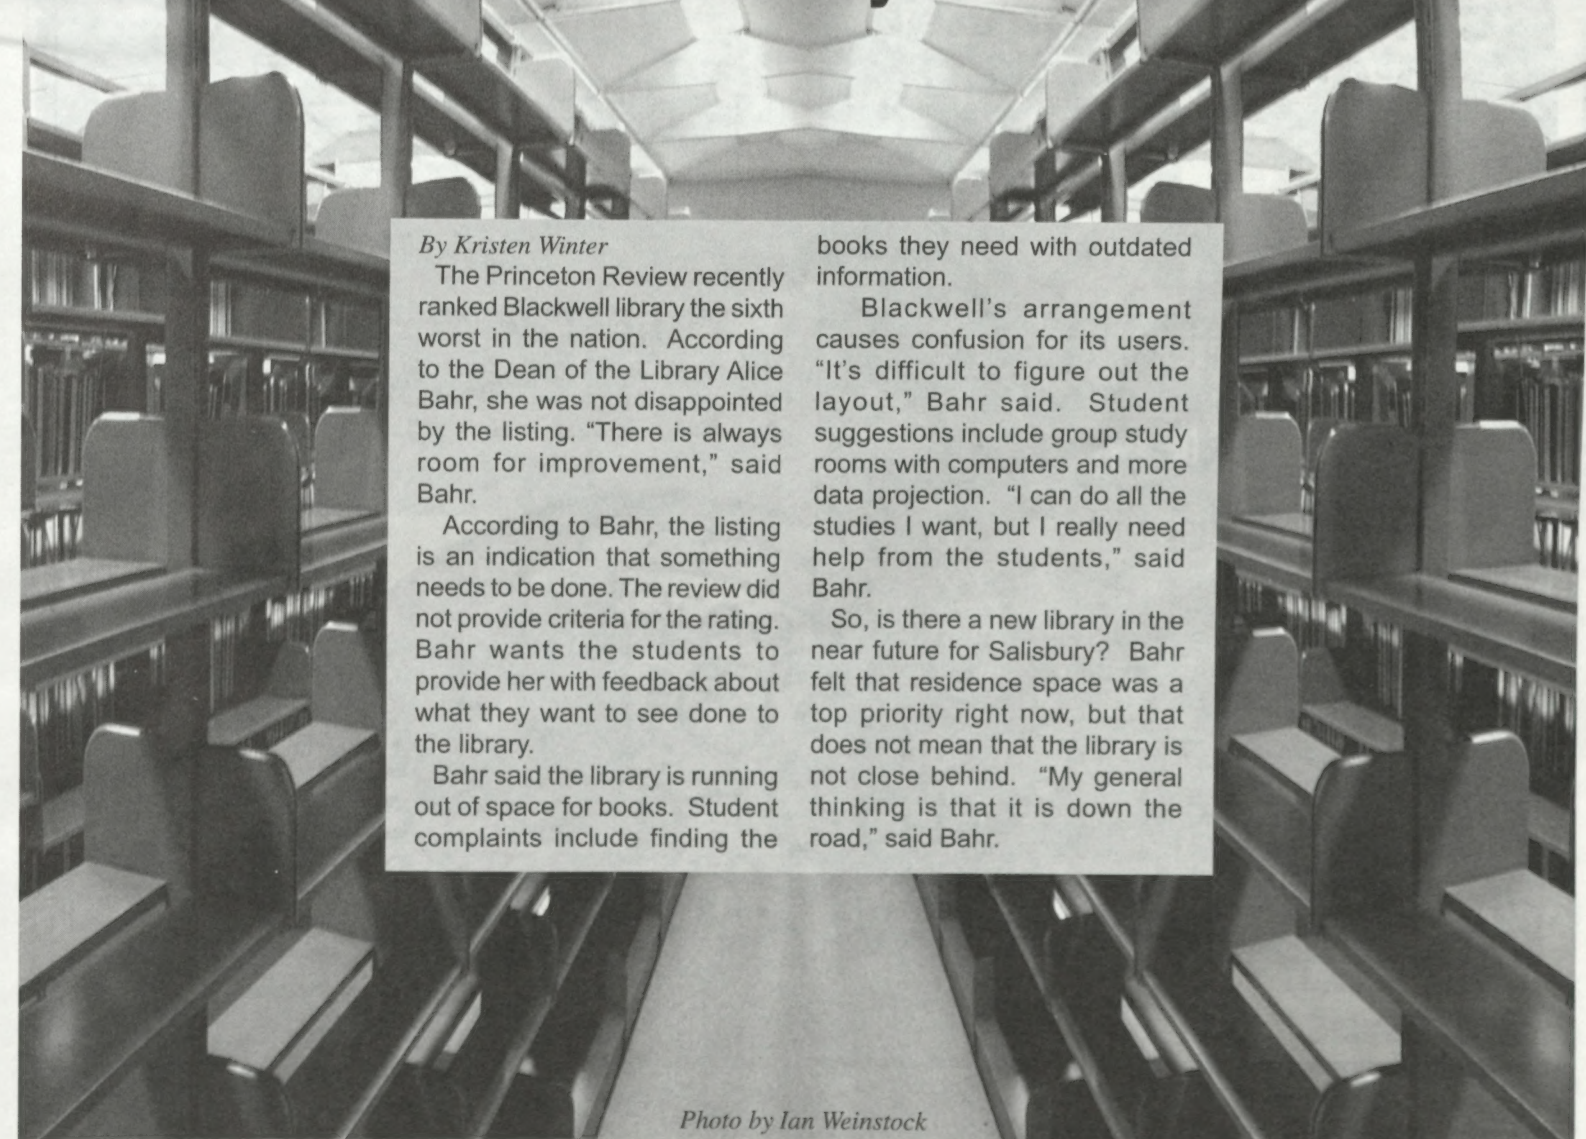

Many students are less interested in physically challenging clubs. Pam Correa is the president of the SU Organization of Latin American Students (OLAS), which attempts to "bring attention and awareness to the campus about the Latin American Community," with student members of any race.

Rohry Flood still finds time outside of a full schedule of classes and work, plus long hours spent in the Library, to help build houses as the president of Habitat for Humanity.

"I love to help people. It makes me feel great to help others in the community and I will always be proud that I did something with my free time throughout college," said Flood.

All clubs have to participate in community service twice per semester. This is a quick and easy way of helping the community through river cleanups, road cleanups, etc.

Is it Time for the Library to be Renovated?

By Kristen Winter

The Princeton Review recently ranked Blackwell library the sixth worst in the nation. According to the Dean of the Library Alice Bahr, she was not disappointed by the listing. "There is always room for improvement," said Bahr.

According to Bahr, the listing is an indication that something needs to be done. The review did not provide criteria for the rating. Bahr wants the students to provide her with feedback about what they want to see done to the library.

Bahr said the library is running out of space for books. Student complaints include finding the books they need with outdated information.

Blackwell's arrangement causes confusion for its users. "It's difficult to figure out the layout," Bahr said. Student suggestions include group study rooms with computers and more data projection. "I can do all the studies I want, but I really need help from the students," said Bahr.

So, is there a new library in the near future for Salisbury? Bahr felt that residence space was a top priority right now, but that does not mean that the library is not close behind. "My general thinking is that it is down the road," said Bahr.

The Honeymoon is Over

By Tiffany Guest

Moving into a dormitory and living with someone you have never met can be like an episode of "The Real World," but worse! You will not receive a car at check-in or a room decorated in the latest furniture from IKEA. Instead, you will get a small room, a key and a roommate.

The honeymoon is that brief period of time in the beginning of the school year when you and your roommate meet and everything goes well. You like each other, you find each other's jokes funny, and you are laid-back about everything from borrowing clothes to sharing snacks and CDs.

Things are going well for you and your roommate until you realize that his talents could include farting and talking in his sleep. You might be a little annoyed when you see her at a party wearing a cute outfit, which is yours. If this is a glimpse of your life right now, then this means that the honeymoon is officially over.

Before you march into the housing office demanding a room change, know that you are not the first to experience roommate conflict.

"Students must first take the initiative to talk with each other about their concerns, no matter how trivial, so that problems won't escalate," says David Gutosky, Associate Director of Residence Life.

"Not respecting others' space is the biggest conflict that residents face," says Jacquie Tolan, a resident assistant here on campus. But every incoming student must realize that most upper class students have been through the same issues that might arise, and their advice might be worth listening to.

"You have to be open to having new experiences with your roommate because both of you will have different perspectives," says SU student Darla Bouma.

Having a roommate can be a very rewarding experience. It can teach you how to assert yourself and deal with your differences. There are a number of resources that can help you if you are having a problem with your roommate, including your resident assistant, counseling services, and your roommate contract. If you can get over the hard times and overcome the obstacles of individual differences, your college experience will be awesome with a capital "A."

Student Spotlight:

MEGHAN TEAL

By Chrissy Moore

Meghan Teal is more than your average college senior. As president of the Student Organization for Activity Planning (SOAP), a Psychology major and a Safe-Ride driver, she has many responsibilities and a packed schedule. A good student who has been honored on the Dean's List every semester since enrollment, she remains surprisingly down to earth.

Teal claims she has "sold her soul to SOAP." She is responsible for overseeing SOAP's large budget and supervising all SOAP committees. SOAP committees operate independently, yet come together during weekly meetings organized by Teal. "I act as the glue that pulls the committees together," she says.

Teal is also required to plan two SOAP sponsored events yearly. She promotes WSUR and has two radio shows: "Too Dum Blonz" which airs Sundays from 7-9 p.m. and "The Vent," in its second season, airing Mondays from 3-5 p.m. She is also planning a mysterious event this spring and hopes to bring someone famous to campus.

Teal is also responsible for training newcomers to SOAP and maintaining the office. She is required to spend at least ten hours a week in the office, but finds herself there at least fifteen hours weekly.

"I love it. All of my best college memories are with SOAP and I've made some of the best friends there," says Teal when asked if she has enjoyed working with SOAP. Teal's work with SOAP has also helped her learn about the entertainment field, which she intends to pursue a career in after graduation in May. After college Teal plans on relocating to New York City or Los Angeles. Once there she hopes to begin a career in film production or in a talent agency. "I'm gonna have a lot of fun doing it," she says.

With the little free time she has, Teal enjoys traveling. She is always up for jumping into a car and driving, mostly to concerts. Teal was lucky enough to drive cross-country this summer. Once in Los Angeles, she and a friend climbed to the "Hollywood" sign and wrote their names on the "L." They also bought a map showing house locations of Hollywood stars and actually went house-to-house ringing doorbells, trying to meet famous people.

Teal looks to her mother for inspiration. "She's the strongest, most open-minded, understanding woman ever," the senior says. "Funny and fun, one of my best friends."

Teal urges her peers to take personal time, but she also advises student to get involved on campus. "Join SOAP," she says. "Listen to the radio at the designated times; Mondays 3-5 p.m. and Sundays 7-9 p.m., come to SOAP sponsored events and don't ever get in a fight on Safe-Ride."

Blackalicious: Blazing Arrow

By Rob Goszkowski

Anyone who is truly interested in hip-hop music should know that for the most part, the artists that get the most airplay on MTV and radio are typically the worst. Big Tymers, Nelly, Puffy and countless others have contributed to the misconception that hip-hop is all about money, cars, and scantily clad women.

Artists like Blackalicious have something considerably more interesting to say and are gaining popularity. Their latest album "Blazing Arrow" came out earlier this year and is a worthy follow up from their last album "NIA." The group consists of two incredibly talented MCs, Gift of Gab and Chief Xcel. A number of other artists make guest appearances including Questlove of The Roots, Charlie 2na from Jurassic 5, Ben Harper, Zack de la Rocha and DJ Shadow. Gil Scott Heron makes a particularly soulful appearance on the track "First In Flight."

R&B, jazz and funk influences permeate this very sonically diverse album. Each song has a unique sound and theme to it that is a breath of fresh air from other artists waving around fistfuls of money and not being able to think about much else. The two MCs are bent on bettering themselves as individuals through introspective thought and just a generally positive attitude about being alive. In "First In Flight" Gift of Gab astutely says, "you can choose to say 'Good morning God' or 'Good God, morning.'"

"Other tracks are less deep but no less entertaining, such as "Chemical Calisthenics," the follow up to "Alphabet Aerobics" from the last album. "Nowhere Fast" and "Green Light" are other tracks worth listening to. The production throughout the entire album is quite good. Overall, the album is one of the best of 2002 and gets an 8 on a scale of 1 to 10.

Networks Gear Up for Fall Lineup

By Chris Weymont

With the start of the fall semester comes the fresh season of television. From shows such as "CSI" and "Friends" to "Buffy the Vampire Slayer," television sets around the nation will be turned on for all thrills, laughs and chills.

Most of the beloved and most-watched television shows will start in the end of September. The fall lineup is starting much earlier than last season because the major networks are debuting their lineup to compete with each other.

One of the most anticipated premieres is "The Sopranos" on HBO. After over a year on hiatus, the fourth season is back on HBO at 9 p.m. Entering in its fourth season, "The Sopranos" surely promises the same excellent acting and writing that is worth every bada-bing.

Salisbury University seems to worship three entertainment icons, including the Dave Matthews Band, "Friends," and "The Simpsons." 40 percent of students polled show an appetite for "Friends."

"Choosing between the father of her baby or Joey, well, it's downright scandalous!" says Katie Adams, a sophomore at SU. Entering its eighth and final season, "Friends" is one of the most anticipated sitcoms NBC has to offer, and it returns September 26.

SU's third entertainment icon is entering its fourteenth season. "The Simpsons" is the longest running cartoon in history and in fact, the producers hope to keep bringing all new episodes to the boob tube for years to come. Since FOX is broadcasting the World Series, "The Simpsons" season premiere will air November 3.

"Buffy the Vampire Slayer," one of the most overlooked television shows, will be making its season premiere on September 24 on UPN. Promising a much lighter tone this season, the writers of Buffy want to get back to its roots of fun story telling. Season seven will see some familiar faces, including the return of Faith and villain super-soldier Adam.

Reality television is here to stay. "Real World XII: Las Vegas" offers the same pretty faces and the lame petty problems that have come to grip American audiences. This season, the cast of the Real World find themselves organizing parties every Tuesday night.

On the other side of the planet comes an all-new cast for "Survivor." Set in Thailand, the eye candy and always-suspenseful moments are sure to live up to the hype, which pits teams by sexes. "Survivor" stars tonight at 9 p.m. on CBS.

Though "Felicity" has graduated, fans of the show may want to check out "Alias." "Alias" is a top-notch spy drama from J.J. Abrams, the creator of Felicity. The second season is said to offer more James Bond-like adventures and fewer twists. However, the twists that do take place will be very suspenseful. "Alias" sneaks into its second season on September 29 at 9 p.m. on ABC.

Even though most of the major networks are relying on tried and true TV series to capture the viewing audiences of America, the fall lineup is sure to be as entertaining as always.

MLB Update

By Matt Gombos

Welcome back to the Major League Update. When we left you last semester it was early in the season. There were no strike talks, the Montreal Expos were atop the NL East, and your Baltimore Orioles were above .500...well, scratch that last one. As I predicted in my last article, the Boston Red Sox choked and currently find themselves 9.5 games in back of your favorite team to hate, the team which has housed greats such as Babe Ruth, Mickey Mantle, Reggie Jackson and Dave Righetti, the only place where you can go and hear "Hey, Pizan, if I eva hear you tawk about Jeter dat way again, I swear on my motha's soul I will stuff this hot dawg so far ..." you get the point. Yes, ladies and gentlemen, I'm talking about the New York Yankees. With two possible MVP candidates in Jason Giambi and Bernie Williams leading the way into the post season, the Yankees have built a comfortable lead at the top of the AL East.

As for the rest of the league, everyone's hometown favorite, the Orioles, are only 27.5 games out of first place. At least they have a nice stadium. In the AL Central we find the Minnesota Twins leading the pack. I guess the threats of them being exiled from MLB lit a fire under their butts. In the AL West, we have the only division race in baseball. The Anaheim Angels and Oakland A's are tied while the Seattle Mariners, led by Ichiro, have dropped to eight games behind. This also means that either the Angels or the A's will most likely win the Wild Card spot in the playoffs.

Now, over to the National League. We've got some hitters in this league this season. Barry Bonds is, once again, big man on campus. He is hitting .372, with 42 home runs, 99 RBI's, 173 walks, and 106 runs scored. In laymen terms, that's awesome. San Francisco may be six games back in the NL West, but they are leading in the wild card by a game. In the central, St. Louis leads by 6.5 games ahead of the Houston Astros. Finally, in the NL East, we find the league's best pennant race going on. We have a real group of winners here, folks. The Atlanta Braves are leading the rest of the division by a narrow margin of only 21 games. Give me a break. This division is so bad. I was at a Mets game this summer, (cough) free tickets, during their 12 game losing-streak. Perez for the Dodgers was throwing a perfect game into the eighth. The Mets fans were actually cheering for the Dodgers. If that's not loyalty I don't know what is. Needless to say this one's in the bag for the Braves. And that is the MLB wrap-up.

Movie of the Week:

Rookie of the Year

By Matt Marsolais

Henry Rowangardner is my hero. I think that the story of him falling and breaking his arm and then coming out of the cast weeks later to be able to throw 90 to 100 mph is a very possible tale. It is just amazing to me to be able to see a career develop like Thomas Ian Nicholas', who played Henry. He starts off with this baseball dynamo and then hits us with his famous line "Hey Stifler, how's the pale ale?"

The cast of this movie pretty much sucks except for Gary Busey. From past experience we know that when Busey is around it is a party. There's a formula that is not taught in math classes and that is Busey = Party.

Good ole Gary plays Chet Steadman, the run-down-about-to-hit-the-wall first baseman, who is revitalized with the love he begins to feel for Henry's mom. Henry is drafted onto the Chicago Cubs once they find out about his magical-freak arm. Once drafted he learns to control his fastball, kind of like how Rick Vaughn learned to control his in "Major League." Henry becomes so good that the team is reborn and the money comes pouring in, while every game the stadium is packed.

By the end of the movie Henry's arm goes back to normal and in true Hollywood form we see a 13-year-old strikeout a professional baseball player who weighs about 300 pounds, with a floating lob. This part disappointed me because the entire movie was very believable and realistic up to this pathetic stunt.

I have a couple pros and cons about this movie. First the pros: 1) There is a man that is actually named Chet Steadman in the film. 2) You get to see John Candy at his finest. 3) Lastly and most importantly you get to see that chubby kid from all the McDonald's ads from the mid 90s.

I only have one bad thing to say about this movie and that is it has not yet been showed on American Movie Classic (AMC). This is a classic and anyone who denies that denies the fact that Busey is the greatest actor of all time.

I am sure almost everyone has seen this movie. If not you must have been watching "Hope Floats," and if so this article does not concern you. I think all of us have at one time or another tried to trip, fall and land on our shoulder to see if we could throw as hard as Henry. When this movie came out the percentages of young people who broke their shoulders was astonishing, so it just goes to show how movies can set trends. After Titanic came out there was a definite increase in the number of girls who let their boyfriends, friends and even strangers paint them naked with an emerald around their neck. So don't rent Rookie of the Year - buy it. Soon you too will be quoting lines from it, like Henry's classic, "WHOA."

Professional and Collegiate Football Open with a Bang Recap of Week One

By Adam Harrow

The site: Fed-Ex Field, Washington D.C. The date: September 8th, 2002. The time: 1 p.m. Emotions are running wild in the hearts of fans, players and spectators as the Redskins get set to kick off a fresh season against the Arizona Cardinals. There are new faces to be seen on the sidelines for the Redskins, with some newly acquired players in the off-season and some rookies that are set to make their NFL debuts. However, one face seems to stand out on the Redskins bench and that is the smiling grin of new coach, Steve Spurrier. Acquired from the Florida Gators in January of 2002, Spurrier's qualifications for the job are enumerable, having an exceptional 122-27-1 record throughout his twelve years as the Gators head coach. As game time approaches and the Redskins take the field on their home turf, the roar and electricity of the crowd ignite a chain-reaction of screams and whistles from the thousands of fans present.

The teams are soon set to play and the opening kickoff goes flying through the air and excited fans look on as the Redskins convert a field goal on their first drive of the game. The energy in the stadium soon takes a hit as the Cardinals jump out to a 13-10 lead at the half. With the faces of the 'Skins drooping at the half, Spurrier was able to take the team into the locker room and re-energize his players for the second half, as Washington came roaring back into the game. At one point, the Redskins went on a 14-0 run and were able to defeat the Cardinals 31-23 in the end, bringing the fans a big "W" to open up the season. QB Shane Matthews and WR Rod Gardner spotlight the game however, connecting for seven receptions, a touchdown and a total of 131 yards.

In other football action, the Ravens took a beating, losing in disgust to the Carolina Panthers. This dropped them not only to the bottom of the division, but the bottom of the ratings. In college action, the Hurricanes proved to everyone that they truly are the top dogs, defeating the Gators 41-16. Some other teams showed their defensive strengths with shutouts, including Texas (2), Oklahoma (3), N.C. State (22) and Notre Dame (21), who shutout the Maryland Terrapins, dropping them from the Top 25. The first week of football has brought much excitement and anticipation and we look forward to the weeks of drama to come.

Gulls Trounce Pioneers

By Doug Morgan

On Saturday the Salisbury University football team squared off against the Pioneers of William Patterson. The Sea Gulls looked for revenge as it matched up against the team that handed them a 26-13 loss last season.

The Pioneers looked as though they would be a formidable opponent early in the game. A last minute change made 6-foot-7 senior, Sean O'Connor the starter at quarterback. O'Connor led the Pioneers to a touchdown on their first drive of the game. That first score took up 4:31 and lasted ten plays. O'Connor would give way to Cristobal Rodriguez early in the game. Several key third down conversions made it look like the Salisbury pass defense would need to step up.

The Sea Gulls scored the first of an array of touchdowns on a 30 yard run by senior running back Tony Ellis (83 yards on 8 carries, 2TD) on an option play. This gave Salisbury their first lead of the game at 7-6. They never looked back.

From this point on the Gulls outplayed the Pioneers in all aspects of the game. Nowhere was this more evident than on the offensive and defensive line. The offensive line played exceptionally well. They were led by junior captain Muhammid Husainey. Several different backs lined up behind them and all of them had a good day. They manhandled the defensive front all day and the statistics prove it. Salisbury had 336 rushing yards on 47 attempts, with not one back gaining 100 yards.

Freshman quarterback, Dustin Johnson had 63 yards on 12 carries, most of which were of an option play. He also completed 8 of 11 passes for 112 yards. The true freshman had two touchdowns passing and one rushing. Senior fullback Reggie Boyce punished linebackers and defensive backs all day with his bruising style of running, which resulted in 57 yards on eight carries.

Senior quarterback Jeff Johnson came in during the second half and proved he was also capable of running the offensive show. He struck quickly with a 37-yard touchdown pass to Joe Hinz.

Yet another freshman standout was running back Teddy Savage. He collected 54 yards on 7 carries. He showed promise with good vision and the ability to lower his shoulder to finish off runs, despite his 5-foot-7 frame.

Perhaps the unsung heroes of this offensive display were the wide receivers. With Salisbury running as much option as it did, it was important for the wide receivers to make their stalk blocks on the secondary and create lanes on the outside for the ball carriers. They did this consistently and avoided the usual holding penalties that are more visible on the outside of the play.

Defensively, the Gulls were very stingy, especially when it mattered. Before the game became a blowout, the defensive line and linebackers proved too much for the Pioneer offense. William Patterson had to run the ball 35 times to reach 121 yards. The standout of the defensive line was freshman Andrew Deming. He pressured the quarterback all day and was credited with two sacks and he batted down a key third down pass at the line of scrimmage.

By the half, Salisbury had a 28-6 lead; by the end of the game they had amassed 55 points and 485 yards of total offense. The Sea Gulls also dominated in special teams. Punter Rick Nistler had 2 excellent punts for an average of 44 yards. Defensive back Chuck Friedel had a blocked punt and kicker Andy Hudson was 7-for-8 on extra point attempts.

Next week the Gulls look to continue their winning ways when they make the trip to Fayetteville, NC to face Methodist college.
